Due Diligence

Grant Westfield has undertaken due diligence to verify the absence of child labour, forced labour, slavery, and human trafficking in our supply chains, including the following:

- Identified and assessed vulnerability and risk within our supply chains and established control measures to mitigate any such risks.
- Internally assessed the supply chain risks as part of our supplier qualification process prior to entering into any trading agreement.
- Required that our point of contact for complex or international suppliers is a UK company or branch and expecting these entities to have suitable anti-slavery and human trafficking policies and processes. We also expect each entity to conduct due diligence on the next link in the chain.
- Taken appropriate checks to ensure that international suppliers comply with International Law on slavery and child labour, including inspection by senior members of management.
- Favouring relationships with organisations that have achieved third party certification of compliance with all applicable laws.
- Visits to companies supplying our materials.

Our Effectiveness in Combatting Slavery and Human Trafficking

We have established the following metrics to establish how effective we have been in ensuring that forced labour, slavery and human trafficking is not taking place in any part of our business or supply chains:

- Targets for completion of supplier assessments.
- Register of Tier 1 suppliers recording those with third party certificates of compliance.
- Targets for assessment visits to international suppliers with whom we have direct dealings.

Training

To ensure a high level of understanding of the risks of modern slavery and human trafficking in our supply chains and our business, training has been provided to relevant members of the Grant Westfield team.
